Profile

Frank is a business law attorney who provides advice to physician's practice groups and a wide range of institutional health care providers on choice of entity decisions, worker classification issues, corporate restructurings, business succession planning and a variety of other tax issues.

His practice also includes providing advice on the organizational and operational aspects of not-for-profit health care organizations. Frank is also a certified public accountant.

Frank has substantial experience helping clients resolve complex federal and state tax matters before both the IRS Appeals Office and the New York State Department of Taxation and Finance, including the Bureau of Conciliation and Mediation Services, the Division of Tax Appeals and the Tax Appeals Tribunal.

Previously, Frank practiced tax law with a large national law firm located in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Before beginning his legal career, Frank was employed by a "Big 4" public accounting firm and later a multinational oil company where his responsibilities included tax planning for domestic and international transactions, financial forecasting, development of business plans and the performance of competitive analysis and business valuation studies.
